The documents, memorandums, directives, guidance and all other material used to determine "What is suspicious activity?" The documents, memorandums, directives, guidance and all other material used to determine the definition of "suspicious activity" as: "any observed behavior that could indicate terrorism or terrorism-related crime." The documents, memorandums, directives, guidance and all other material used to determine how a constitutionally protected activity like filming can logically be interpreted as, not a right that should be defended and protected, but instead as an "indicator of terrorism-related suspicious activity." The documents, memorandums, directives, guidance and all other material used to determine how the "If you see something, say something" campaign actually respects citizens' privacy and civil rights & liberties when the guidance contained in the campaign directly causes civil rights violations to take place, i.e. a police officer notices someone filming a building and based on this campaign's guidance, decides to seize the person filming while "further investigating". This seizure would be unlawful and a violation of a citizen's civil rights yet it is essentially the directive that this department is giving to law enforcement agencies.	1/9/2020
