

07/28/04

Public Comment

To The Dept. of Homeland Security:

Regarding the proposed broad environmental exemptions from the Bush Administration to allow government agencies to develop and degrade public resources in the name of "security." I am a very concerned citizen who demands the right to know what is going on in my surrounding environment, and have a say so. I think this is another obvious ploy to put America's land up for grabs, without having to consult the rest of America. Even if they conducted environmental reviews, making them unavailable for public comment is undemocratic and therefore unfair. I do not believe that protecting Americans by keeping chemical weapons or storage on hand is a valid argument. In fact, I am more afraid of my government right now, than any terrorist; and I would prefer to know if my government decides to store chemicals in my surrounding area/environment. This Administration has proved time and time again that it would rather be a diplomacy than a democracy! It's disgusting, and it doesn't protect our citizens so much as it harms us!

Thank you,

Cody Traweck